High-minded – book

We all have had, at one moment or another, the feeling of fighting our own minds, not knowing how to control them. When things go well, we think we were lucky. When they go badly, we think we're weak, not good enough, or that someone set us up. Is it true? Not at all. Almost every time the outcome, good or bad is decided by us, in our minds. That's what we're here to talk about! Let's find out how we can be more positive, more attentive and effective, more confident.

HIGHLIGHTS: Growing relevance of the subject for both parents and teachers; practical exercises for training our minds in the classroom or at home; tips for public speaking; the importance of well-being and mind discipline to go through everyday life; paperback.
